Designer Josh Flowers

Mockup of Flower Chair

To facilitate comfort – physical and social – Flower Chair swivels, empowering sitters to find the best view, change their position in relation to the sun, interact with friends or enjoy some peace and quiet alone.

Flower Chair can be powder coated in any colour for dramatic effect, an instant cue for play. Its photogenic form makes it ripe for sharing on social media to attract more visitors.

The seat is designed by Josh Flowers, a former industrial design student at the University of New South Wales. Flowers won a design challenge set by Street Furniture Australia in partnership with the university, called Sense of Place. The brief asked students to design furniture that gives people a reason to stop and engage with a public place.

"The Flower Chair is designed to activate and uplift public spaces," says Flowers.

"The process of designing it at Street Furniture has been incredibly exciting, from early mockups to machined prototypes. We have been been meticulous in the details and passionate about the resolution of the concept."

As part of Street Furniture Australia's commitment to developing young industrial designers, Flowers receives royalties for the Flower Chair, while achieving a dream to see people interact with his seat in the public domain.

Prototypes were well received at the 2016 International Festival of Landscape Architecture in Canberra, Australia. Street Furniture Australia surveyed delegates, many of them landscape architects, to collect feedback and suggestions for improvement.

After three years of meticulous development, focusing on strength, reliability and comfort, Flower Chair is a contemporary, joyful adornment to any landscape, inspiring smiles and encouraging play.
